

Green Economy

is a transitional economic model between the linear and the circular economy models. In the model, resource-effective and environment-friendly technologies are applied at individual links in the supply chains, allowing for exploitation of circular principles such as recycling, remanufacturing, composting and energy recovery. The system still creates “waste” of natural and human resources that is disposed without being restored and brought back into economic circuits (or human use).