

Regenerative design

assumes that processes within all systems must renew or regenerate the sources of energy and materials that they consume, in order to stay within the limits of nature.